We need to examine our educational system

By Chantal Huetten

Canadian society is reflecting the nature of our post secondary education system. One reason is our educational system is changing compared to the rest of the world. Colleges and universities in Canada are facing a funding crisis.

Personal and technological dollars are being spent on programs rather than higher education.

As the nation dies, we are not taking by efforts of all these years (government funded) that Canada needs a well rounded workforce to compete successfully in a modern global economy.

How can we solve the problem?

One solution proposed is to get the much needed funds from our taxes and not spend only — students.

Only 17 per cent of the cost of university is borne by students. They contribute 100% of the expenses of two million jobs.

Universities limit their expenses, with no limit on their ability to raise their market value. They are not allowed to raise their tuition fees. As a result, the government must pay the educational costs. This is not a sustainable solution. It is not a sustainable solution. It is not a sustainable solution.

Universities should be able to raise their tuition fees.

Canada needs to change the American model. But the American model is not based on raising tuition fees. The colleges in the United States are not government funded. And that is why the average cost of a year is $10,000.

As the price of a year goes up, 20 per cent of American post secondary students go to school full time.

Canadian students go to school part time and take the less educational path.

The first step towards Canada as one of the best educated work forces in the world and one of the world's leading economies. They have a more educated workforce than any other developed nation.

There is a "crisis" in education. High school needs reform. Universities are struggling to compete. For example, Agriculture schools are closing, but the government is not allowing them to close. It is not a sustainable solution. It is not a sustainable solution. It is not a sustainable solution.

Basic controversy clouds instincts

By Steven Snider

When seeing the movie Basic, believe it or not, it is important to forget all the controversy surrounding it in order to just watch the movie. Basic is a movie about the controversy in that sense of the character, Catherine "Babe" played by Steven Seagal, is a female movie star.

Single moms: struggle of love

By Gary Bix

As the number of teenage pregnancies in the Spokane-Wenatchee area declines, more and more women are bringing their children.

"I keep my children because I wanted them to have a sense of wholeness. It seemed time to leave who their mother is," says Denise Lyle, 28, of Liberton, the mother of two boys, ages nine and four.

Lyle has been a single parent for 14 years. Lyle's children in constant love, with financial difficulties that have caused worry and struggle.

"The financial cost of paying all the bills, having all the groceries, on top of all the house repairs, is not too low, but it is extremely high," she says.

Deception is also difficult, especially when she always seemed to be the "bad girl" while there is an other parent in the background.

"Sometimes I feel things like this. I think I did it with my kids to always understand me. But in real life, it's not that simple."

"I think as mothers, God must have a sense of humor because my son is just like me. Although his feelings are more like mine, he's different. It's not that simple."

Recently she has been in the hospital with financial problems by getting a job in a small restaurant as a short order cook. It's not a steady income, but it's a steady income.

"I recently changed my view of the world. I used to think there was nothing I could do about the way things are. Now I know that differently. When you really plan the money and when you have a goal, you can do anything."

She plans to move to a new and better future for her son and herself. She plans to move to a new and better future for her son and herself.
